INTRODUCTION

HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHICAL LOCATION OF THE UNIT

The LPTENS was founded in 1974 by Philippe MEYER and Claude BOUCHIAT when a group of theoretical physicists (high energy physics and particle physics) moved from the LPTHE of the university of Orsay to the École Normale Supérieure in Paris. LPTENS is located 24, rue Lhomond, in Paris.

HCERES NOMENCLATURE

ST2 Physics

SCIENTIFIC DOMAIN

The research of the laboratory was initially devoted to theoretical high-energy physics. It has expanded to cover a much broader range of topics. LPTENS is organized now in two teams.

Team A covers the study of the fundamental interactions between particles and fields, which includes quantum field theory, string theory, quantum gravity and applications.

Team B works on statistical physics and its numerous applications, which include many-body quantum mechanics, glasses, biophysics and combinatorial optimization.

GLOBAL ASSESSMENT OF THE UNIT

LPTENS is an outstanding research unit with exceptional international visibility. It has contributed leading breakthroughs in theoretical physics and continues to pursue outstanding research with the same vigour and excellence.

The members of the laboratory regularly participate in outreach activities where the latest developments in theoretical physics are made available to the public at large (popular lectures, radio or television interviews, press articles).

The unit is extremely attractive to PhD students and postdocs due the excellence of its research and the involvement of its members in teaching and training through research.

The coexistence of a great variety of research directions with a fruitful overlap between themes and methods is a remarkable feature of the laboratory. There is a strong feeling of belonging and shared values amongst all members of the laboratory.

The committee is impressed by the scientific strategy as well as by the broadness and depth of the projects. It is convinced that significant progress will continue to be achieved with the same exceptional success.
